cific coast tennis men will declare open warfare on the East if the National Association ousts Maurice E. McLoughlin and Thomas C. Bundy from the amateur ranks because they have become partners in a sporting goods house in this city. William M. Johnston, tennis champion of the United States, is one who thinks that it would be an unjust move on the part of the national tennis body if that organization professionalized McLoughlin and Bundy.

"To my mind the accusation has been an unjust one throughout," said Johnston. Thomas C. Bundy of the new firm of Mc-Loughlin & Bundy said: "Maury and I are not worrying at all about what the committee may do. I think there is little chance of so drastic action being taken. The majority of the members of the committee are friends of both Maury and myself, and unless some new rule is adopted we cannot see how we can be affected."
